November is a perfect time to shoot a cityscape. The air is crisp and clear. Below is last night's shoot of the Longfellow Bridge as viewed from Cambridge. This bridge is fitted with LED lights that sometimes change to different colors. It's a scene that is always fun to photograph. Coming up in December, a Meetup in Boston where we capture the lights of the season! Sign up for Meetup events, it's free. This event will be scheduled towards the end of this month.

Cakes and Cars

One of the things that you often hear is that you can create art with any camera that you have, even your phone. Yes, this is true. However, there is another perspective to consider. Often people feel that it's their abilities that hold them back from producing an image that they are satisfied with. The reality is it's also about ...

How To: Planning an Aurora Image with PlanIt! Pro

The developers of PlanIt! have added a great feature to the Pro version of the app. You can now previsualize a shot with an aurora. Say what? How can you plan an aurora shot when the aurora is such an elusive event? It's called planning forward while looking back. As we are into solar maximum, we have a couple of ...
