I recently asked what you want to learn, where you want to explore, and what skills you want to sharpen. Here's what we have so far for photographic excursion wishes and I want to hear more! The plans for 2025 will start taking shape soon.

- Iceland in the spring for lupines and waterfalls.
- Acadia National Park in the fall.
- Autumn foliage and night skies in NH.
- Borrego Springs Milky Way.
- The southwestern US for infrared and nightscapes.
- Oregon coast.
- Photo tours along the Bold Coast of Maine.
- Expanded photo tour of Acadia National Park.
- Lighthouse crawls.
- New astrolandscape multi-day workshops in and around New England.

Tomorrow, Saturday, December 7th, a Meetup in Boston where we capture the lights of the season! Join me as we navigate the Boston Public Garden and Commons. Sign up for Meetup events, it's free! Below, is a blog post for capturing the moments of December. We will be putting these tips to work tomorrow night. Creative filters are often disregarded in the digital photography era but were a mainstay in film photography. I still use my creative filters from decades ago and recommend folks not lean solely on post-processing to add filter effects. Physical filters are much more powerful and creative. I will have creative filters with me if you want to give them a spin. My filters are 82mm and can be used on 82mm and 77mm lenses. If you want to try them out and need a smaller filter, bring a step-down ring. Don't have a step-down ring? Let me know and I will try to accommodate your filter size.

Night Shades - A Guide to Photography After Dark is officially released. Preorders have all been shipped and December orders will ship soon. I thank you all for your incredible support!

On Saturday, January 11th, 2025 from 3:30-5 pm EST, I will be presenting "The Infrared Zone" via Zoom for members of NYMACC and all interested photographers. If you would like to join us, please register via this link.

Stay well and I hope to see you soon!

Clear skies,

Silvana
